The work of the Case Committee has made it clear to all who are actually engaged in the practical prevention of consumption that a knowledge of the home conditions of the patients is essential before arranging for suitable treatment. This applies whether the patient is treated at the Dispensary or in other institutions, such as sanatoria or hospitals.

Treatment of patients in institutions will be most successful if some definite link is provided between those responsible for the administrative control of tuberculosis and bodies such as the Case Committee, which have an accurate knowledge of the patients' home conditions.

FRANCIS MORRIS,
Chairman of the Case Committee.
